

and Rylee is curious

As we went exploring under the trees Rylee, you were curious to know what all the different plants were that you came across. The first one grew low over the ground and looked like wild strawberry. You liked the sound of that and checked out all the plants to see if there really were any strawberries to be had, but - no luck! We decided it might be a little bit early to have strawberries growing. As you started to discover other plants you kept asking, "Pat, what plant is this?" My knowledge of plants is not great so I suggested we look them up when we got back to kindergarten. You took photos of all the ones you wanted to identify, including some really interesting looking fungus growths on the tree stumps. What an interesting project, and a great way to find out more about what plants grow at our farm. Rylee, you are always asking questions and keen to find out more, which is a great way to learn. Your interest inspired others to look closely for unusual finds and they discovered seed pods, strange looking flowers, shells and bones. Thank you for your enthusiasm for knowing more and helping us all to learn!
